Prompt:

Read the passage and answer the question.

The Community Fridge

The first community fridge on Linden Street began with an old refrigerator, a painted wooden shelter, and a sign that read, “Take what you need. Leave what you can.” It stood outside a neighborhood center where residents could place unopened packaged foods, fresh produce, and bottled drinks for anyone to take.

At first, some people doubted that the project would last. They worried the fridge would become messy, empty, or unsafe. The neighborhood center responded by creating clear rules. Volunteers checked the fridge twice a day, removed expired items, cleaned the shelves, and recorded the temperature. A list on the side of the shelter explained what could be donated and what could not. Homemade meals, opened containers, and raw meat were not accepted.

Within a few months, the fridge became more than a place to leave extra food. A local bakery began donating unsold bread twice a week. Gardeners brought tomatoes, peppers, and herbs during the summer. Families who did not qualify for some assistance programs used the fridge when paychecks ran short. People also began leaving notes: “Thank you for the apples,” or “More baby food would help.”

The fridge did not end food insecurity in the neighborhood. It could not replace a stable income, affordable groceries, or larger food programs. Still, it created a small, reliable way for neighbors to share resources directly. Its success depended not only on generosity, but also on organization.

What is the main idea of the passage?

- A) A community fridge can help neighbors share food when generosity is supported by clear rules and regular care.
- B) A community fridge is useful only when it accepts homemade meals and raw meat.
- C) The Linden Street project failed because residents did not donate enough food.
- D) Food insecurity can be solved completely by placing one refrigerator outside.

Tenant Repair Request Update

To: Residents of Riverbend Apartments

From: Property Management Office

Subject: New Repair Request System

Beginning August 5, all non-emergency repair requests must be submitted through the resident portal or by calling the office during business hours. The new system will assign each request a tracking number so residents can check its status.

Non-emergency repairs include dripping faucets, loose cabinet handles, stuck closet doors, broken window screens, and appliance problems that do not create an immediate safety risk. Emergency repairs should still be reported by calling the 24-hour maintenance line. Emergencies include active flooding, no heat during cold weather, electrical sparks, broken exterior locks, or any condition that makes an apartment unsafe.

When submitting a request, include the apartment number, a brief description of the problem, and the best times for maintenance staff to enter. If possible, attach a photo. Clear descriptions help staff bring the correct tools and parts on the first visit.

Residents who have already submitted a request do not need to submit it again. Requests made before August 5 will be entered into the new system by office staff. Residents without internet access may call the office or visit the lobby kiosk during regular office hours.

What is the main purpose of the notice?

- A) To explain how residents should submit and track non-emergency repair requests
- B) To announce that all repair requests have been canceled
- C) To require residents to complete their own apartment repairs
- D) To tell residents that emergency repairs must be submitted only through the portal

Make Room for Walking Meetings

Businesses should encourage walking meetings for small groups when the topic does not require a screen or confidential documents. A walking meeting is exactly what it sounds like: two or three coworkers discuss a work issue while walking indoors or outdoors. It is not appropriate for every situation, but it can be a useful option.

Walking meetings can improve focus. Many employees spend most of the day sitting at desks, moving from one screen-based task to another. A short walk can help people think through a problem without the usual distractions of email alerts and office interruptions. Some supervisors report that walking meetings are especially helpful for brainstorming, project check-ins, and mentoring conversations.

They can also support health without turning the workplace into a gym. A fifteen-minute walk around the building will not replace regular exercise, but it does add movement to a long workday. Employees who feel uncomfortable with intense wellness programs may be more willing to take part in a simple walking conversation.

Critics may argue that walking meetings are inefficient or exclude people with mobility needs. Those concerns matter. Walking meetings should be optional, short, and limited to topics that can be discussed safely. Teams should choose accessible routes or offer seated alternatives. With these guidelines, walking meetings can become one more flexible tool for communication, not a required workplace trend.

What is the author’s main claim?

- A) Businesses should use walking meetings as an optional communication tool for suitable situations.
- B) Businesses should replace all meetings with outdoor exercise.
- C) Employees should discuss confidential documents while walking through public spaces.
- D) Walking meetings should be required for every employee every day.

The Missing Page

Leah had repaired hundreds of books at the small-town library, but the old atlas made her pause. It was heavy, with cloth corners worn smooth by years of hands. A note inside the cover said it had belonged to a family that ran a travel agency before the highway bypassed Main Street.

Most pages needed only gentle cleaning. Then Leah found a torn edge between the maps of South America and Africa. One page was missing. The empty space bothered her more than the cracked spine. A missing page made the atlas feel unfinished, as if someone had taken a doorway out of a house.

She searched the library catalog, then the storage closet, then a box of donated maps waiting to be sorted. Nothing matched. At lunch, she mentioned the atlas to Mr. Chen, who visited the library every Wednesday to read newspapers. He smiled and said his sister had worked at the travel agency as a teenager. "She kept scraps from everything," he said. "Postcards, ticket stubs, maps. I'll ask."

Two days later, Mr. Chen returned with a folded atlas page wrapped in tissue paper. The colors had faded, but the paper size and print matched. Leah did not ask how the page had left the book years before. She only smoothed it gently and began the repair.

When the atlas returned to the reference shelf, most visitors would not notice the mended seam. Leah noticed. To her, the atlas no longer looked perfect, but it looked whole.

What is the main conflict in the excerpt?

- A) Leah must decide whether to close the library early.
- B) Leah tries to restore an old atlas after discovering that a page is missing.
- C) Mr. Chen wants to sell newspapers at the library.
- D) A travel agency asks Leah to remove maps from the reference shelf.

Read the informational passage and answer the question.

The Label on the Package

Many people have thrown away food because of a date printed on the package. However, food date labels can be confusing because they often describe quality rather than safety. A “best if used by” date usually means the manufacturer expects the food to taste freshest before that date. It does not always mean the food becomes unsafe the next day.

A “use by” date may be more important for certain refrigerated foods, especially items that spoil quickly. Even then, the date should be considered along with signs such as smell, texture, damaged packaging, or whether the food has been stored at a safe temperature. A carton of milk left in a hot car for hours may spoil before the date. A sealed box of dry pasta may remain usable long after its quality date.

Understanding labels can reduce waste and save money. Families may throw away unopened foods that are still usable simply because the printed date has passed. Stores and food pantries also face decisions about what can be donated or distributed. Clearer labeling and better consumer education can help people make safer and less wasteful choices.

The passage does not suggest ignoring food safety. Instead, it argues that people should understand what labels mean and use them with common sense. Dates are useful information, but they are not the only information.

What is the main idea of the passage?

- A) Food date labels should be understood as one piece of information when judging quality and safety.
- B) All food is unsafe after the date printed on the package.
- C) Dry pasta spoils faster than refrigerated milk.
- D) People should ignore all package labels when buying food.

Read the paired passages and answer the question.

Passage A: Keep the Community Bulletin Board

The library should keep its physical community bulletin board near the front entrance. Some people argue that announcements should move entirely online, but the bulletin board serves residents who do not check social media or who have limited internet access. Job fairs, free health screenings, neighborhood meetings, and lost-pet notices are easy to see when people enter the building.

A physical board also creates a shared public space. When announcements are posted together, residents can discover events they were not specifically searching for. Someone visiting for a book may notice a tenant-rights workshop or a free concert in the park. Online platforms often show people only what they already follow.

The board does need better management. Old flyers should be removed weekly, and postings should include dates, contact information, and clear language. These improvements would make the bulletin board more useful without eliminating it. The library should update the board, not replace it with an online-only system.

Passage B: Move Announcements Online

The library should replace the crowded bulletin board with an online community calendar. The current board is often messy, outdated, and difficult to read. Flyers overlap, important information is hidden, and staff spend time answering questions about events that have already passed.

An online calendar would be easier to search and update. Residents could filter events by date, topic, or location. Community groups could submit announcements through a simple form, and staff could approve them before they appear. This system would reduce clutter and make information more accurate.

Supporters of the physical board point out that not everyone has easy internet access. That concern is real, but the library already offers public computers and staff help. The library could also print a weekly one-page calendar for visitors who prefer paper. A modern system can still include offline support while avoiding the confusion of an overcrowded wall.

What is the central difference between the two passages?

- A) Passage A favors keeping a managed physical board, while Passage B favors replacing it with an online calendar plus paper support.
- B) Passage A argues that libraries should stop posting announcements, while Passage B argues that libraries should close public computers.
- C) Passage A supports paid advertising, while Passage B supports banning community groups.
- D) Passage A focuses on lost books, while Passage B focuses on library fines.

Type: essay

Category: Extended Response

Prompt:

Read both passages. Write an evidence-based essay of 300–500 words explaining which position is better supported. Use evidence from both passages. Maintain a formal tone and organize your response clearly.

Passage A:

Ban Single-Use Plastic Bags at Checkout

The city should ban single-use plastic bags at grocery and retail checkout counters. These bags are used for only a short time but can remain in the environment for years. They blow out of trash bins, clog storm drains, and break into smaller pieces that are difficult to remove from soil and waterways. A citywide ban would encourage shoppers to bring reusable bags and would reduce one common source of litter.

The change would be manageable. Many stores already sell reusable bags near the entrance, and several nearby towns have adopted similar rules. After the first few weeks, most shoppers adjust by keeping bags in a car, backpack, or near the front door. The city could also require stores to provide recycled-paper bags for a small fee and distribute free reusable bags at libraries and community centers during the transition.

Opponents say a ban would inconvenience shoppers, especially people who forget bags or make unplanned purchases. That concern is real, but convenience should not outweigh the long-term cost of avoidable waste. The city already asks residents to sort recycling and follow trash rules because individual habits affect the whole community. Reducing plastic bag waste is another reasonable step.

Passage B:

Do Not Ban Plastic Bags

The city should not ban single-use plastic bags at checkout. Reducing waste is a worthy goal, but a ban is a blunt solution that may create new problems. Some shoppers reuse plastic bags for trash liners, pet waste, or carrying wet items. If checkout bags disappear, many residents may buy small plastic bags instead, reducing the environmental benefit.

A ban may also place a burden on people with limited income or limited transportation. Reusable bags cost money, and they must be cleaned to avoid carrying food residue. People who shop by bus or on foot may make unplanned stops and may not always have bags with them. A fee for paper bags may seem small, but it affects families who count every dollar.

The city can reduce plastic waste without a ban. Stores could offer discounts for reusable bags, place bag-recycling bins near entrances, and train cashiers not to double-bag items unless requested. Public education can encourage better habits while preserving flexibility. A policy should reduce waste without punishing shoppers for ordinary mistakes or needs.

Writing Task:

Which passage presents the better-supported argument about whether the city should ban single-use plastic bags at checkout? Write an essay explaining your position. Use evidence from both passages to support your analysis.

Rubric Guidance:

- Analyze which argument is better supported.
- Use relevant evidence from both passages.
- Explain why the evidence supports your claim.
- Address weaknesses or limitations in the less-supported argument.
- Organize ideas logically.
- Use clear sentence structure, grammar, and formal language.
