Prompt:

Read the passage and answer the question.

Lights Out for Migration

Every spring and fall, thousands of birds migrate over the city of Fairmont at night. They use stars, moonlight, landforms, and instinct to guide their travel. Bright building lights can confuse them, especially during cloudy weather when natural sky cues are harder to see. Birds may circle lit buildings until they are exhausted or collide with windows they cannot recognize as barriers.

After volunteers found dozens of dead or injured birds downtown during one migration season, the city created a voluntary “Lights Out” program. Building owners were asked to turn off unnecessary lights above the fifth floor from midnight to dawn during peak migration weeks. The city also encouraged residents and businesses to close blinds, reduce decorative lighting, and place decals on large windows where collisions had occurred.

The program did not require every light to go dark. Emergency lighting, security lighting, and lights needed for overnight workers could remain on. The goal was to reduce avoidable light, not to make buildings unsafe or unusable.

The first year’s results were modest but promising. Volunteers reported fewer bird collisions in the blocks where most buildings participated. The city also learned that outreach mattered. Some building managers had not known that upper-floor lights could affect migrating birds. Once they understood the timing and purpose of the program, several agreed to participate the following season.

Fairmont’s experience shows that small changes in human habits can make cities safer for wildlife without stopping city life.

What is the main idea of the passage?

- A) Fairmont’s voluntary “Lights Out” program reduced avoidable nighttime lighting to help migrating birds.
- B) Fairmont required every building to turn off emergency lighting all night.
- C) Migrating birds travel only during the daytime and are not affected by city lights.
- D) Building owners refused to participate after learning about bird migration.

Hotel Lost-and-Found Procedure

To: Front Desk, Housekeeping, and Security Staff

From: Guest Services Manager

Subject: Updated Lost-and-Found Procedure

Beginning December 1, all found guest items must be logged before the end of the shift. Items may include clothing, chargers, jewelry, medication, luggage, documents, or personal electronics.

When an item is found, the employee should place it in a clear bag if possible and attach a label with the date, room or location, employee name, and brief item description. Valuable items, medication, passports, and identification cards must be taken directly to the security office. Do not leave these items in an unlocked housekeeping cart or at the front desk.

The front desk may contact a guest only after the item has been logged. Staff should describe the item generally and ask the guest to confirm details before arranging pickup or shipping. For example, say “a bracelet was found,” not “a silver bracelet with blue stones was found.” This helps confirm that the item belongs to the guest.

Items not claimed within 90 days will be handled according to company policy. Questions about shipping, storage, or valuable items should be directed to the guest services manager.

What is the main purpose of the document?

- A) To explain how staff should label, secure, and record found guest items
- B) To tell staff to leave valuable items on housekeeping carts
- C) To require guests to describe every item before it is found
- D) To announce that the hotel will stop returning lost items

Offer Free Notary Hours

The county should offer free monthly notary hours at community centers. Many ordinary tasks require a notarized signature, including some school forms, housing documents, vehicle paperwork, medical authorization forms, and financial documents. People who do not know where to find a notary may delay important paperwork or pay fees they can barely afford.

Free notary hours would not replace legal advice. A notary verifies identity and witnesses signatures; a notary does not explain whether a document is legally wise to sign. The county could make this clear by posting signs and training staff to refer legal questions to appropriate services. The program would simply make a required administrative step easier.

The need is especially real for residents with limited transportation or inflexible work schedules. A person who works during bank hours may struggle to find a notary without missing wages. A parent completing a school form may need the service quickly. Community centers already serve as trusted locations for public programs, so they are practical places to host monthly notary sessions.

Some critics may argue that notary service is a small issue compared with housing, health care, or employment. But small barriers can still block important progress. A free notary program would be inexpensive, limited, and useful. It would help residents complete necessary paperwork without turning a simple signature into a larger problem.

What is the author’s main claim?

- A) The county should offer free notary hours because notarized signatures are sometimes necessary and can create barriers for residents.
- B) The county should require every document to be notarized.
- C) Notaries should give legal advice about every form residents bring.
- D) Community centers should stop hosting public programs.

The Practice Room

Tara had cleaned the dance studio every evening for nearly a year, sliding dust mops across the wooden floor after students went home. She knew the rhythm of every class from the hallway: tap on Mondays, ballroom on Wednesdays, children's ballet on Saturdays. She also knew which mirror had a crack near the corner and which window rattled when buses passed.

One rainy Thursday, Ms. Inez found Tara lingering near the doorway after the beginner salsa class. "You keep time better than some people who pay me," she said. "Do you want to try?"

Tara laughed too quickly. "I work here."

"That was not my question."

The next week, Tara stayed after her shift. The room felt different without a mop handle in her hands. She stood at the back of the class, trying to copy the steps without looking as nervous as she felt. Left, right, pause. Back, forward, turn. Her shoes squeaked. Twice, she moved the wrong way and nearly bumped the radiator.

At the end, Ms. Inez asked everyone to repeat the first pattern. This time Tara counted softly under her breath. She made one turn without stopping, then another. When the music ended, she looked automatically toward the mirrors, expecting to see proof that she did not belong.

Instead, she saw the cracked corner, the rattling window, and herself still standing in the room.

What is the main conflict in the excerpt?

- A) Tara must overcome the belief that she does not belong as a student in the dance studio.
- B) Tara tries to repair the cracked mirror before class begins.
- C) Tara wants Ms. Inez to cancel the salsa class.
- D) Tara argues with other students about the music.

Reading a Lease Renewal Notice

A lease renewal notice tells a tenant what choices are available when a rental agreement is close to ending. The notice may offer a new fixed-term lease, explain a rent change, describe a month-to-month option, or state the deadline for responding. Reading the notice carefully can help tenants avoid confusion and unexpected costs.

One important detail is the response date. If a tenant misses the deadline, the lease may automatically change to month-to-month status, renew under stated terms, or end, depending on the original agreement and local rules. Tenants should not assume the deadline is flexible. If they need more time, they should contact the landlord or property manager in writing.

Another detail is the difference between rent and fees. A notice may list the new monthly rent but mention separate charges for parking, pets, storage, or late payment. A tenant comparing options should calculate the full monthly cost, not just the rent line. If any charge is unclear, the tenant should ask for written clarification before signing.

A lease renewal notice is not the same as legal advice. Tenants with serious concerns may need help from a housing counselor or attorney. Still, careful reading can help tenants understand dates, costs, and choices before making a decision that affects where they live.

What is the main idea of the passage?

- A) A lease renewal notice gives important information about deadlines, costs, and rental choices.
- B) A lease renewal notice always means a tenant must move immediately.
- C) Tenants should ignore fees when comparing rental options.
- D) Landlords are never allowed to change rent at renewal time.

Read the paired passages and answer the question.

Passage A: Allow Food Trucks on Main Street

The city should create designated food truck spaces on Main Street during weekday lunch hours. Office workers, students, courthouse visitors, and construction crews often have only a short break. Food trucks would provide quick, varied meals without requiring people to drive across town. A few marked spaces would bring more activity to the area and give small food businesses a chance to reach customers.

Food trucks can also support existing businesses. People who come downtown for lunch may stop at a bookstore, pharmacy, or coffee shop afterward. The city could require trucks to use assigned spaces, follow health rules, pay a permit fee, and operate only during certain hours. These limits would prevent trucks from blocking sidewalks or staying all day.

Some restaurant owners worry about competition. That concern is understandable, but competition already exists among restaurants, cafés, and grocery prepared-food counters. A limited food truck program would add choices without replacing permanent restaurants. The city should test the idea for six months and review traffic, sales, and complaints before making it permanent.

Passage B: Protect Main Street Restaurants First

The city should not add food truck spaces on Main Street during lunch hours. Downtown restaurants pay rent, property-related costs, utilities, insurance, and year-round staffing expenses. Food trucks have lower costs and could park near restaurant doors during the busiest part of the day. That is not a fair balance.

Main Street also has limited curb space. Delivery drivers, customers with disabilities, buses, and emergency vehicles already compete for access. Adding food trucks could increase congestion and make it harder for people to reach the very businesses the city wants to support. Sidewalk crowding may also become a problem near courthouse entrances and crosswalks.

The city can support small food businesses in other ways. It could invite food trucks to evening festivals, weekend markets, or underused lots outside the busiest blocks. These options would give vendors access to customers without disrupting lunch service for permanent restaurants. A healthy downtown depends on businesses that invest in the area all year, so the city should protect them before adding new curbside competition.

What is the central difference between the two passages?

- A) Passage A supports a limited weekday food truck program on Main Street, while Passage B argues that the city should protect restaurants and curb access first.
- B) Passage A argues that restaurants should close permanently, while Passage B argues that food should not be sold downtown.
- C) Passage A supports banning all small businesses, while Passage B supports removing sidewalks.

Type: essay

Category: Extended Response

Prompt:

Read both passages. Write an evidence-based essay of 300–500 words explaining which position is better supported. Use evidence from both passages. Maintain a formal tone and organize your response clearly.

Passage A:

Start High School Later

High schools should begin later in the morning. Teenagers often have sleep patterns that make it difficult to fall asleep early, yet many high schools start before 8:00 a.m. Students who arrive tired may struggle to concentrate, remember information, and manage stress. A later start time would better match students' sleep needs and improve the school day.

The benefits could reach beyond academics. Tired students are more likely to be late, miss school, or feel overwhelmed. A schedule that allows more sleep may improve attendance and mood. Some schools that moved start times later reported fewer morning tardies and more alert students in first-period classes. Students still need good habits, but the schedule should not make healthy sleep harder.

Changing the start time would require planning. Bus routes, after-school activities, sports practices, and family schedules would need adjustment. These challenges are real, but they are not impossible. Districts can shift elementary and high school bus times, coordinate with coaches, and give families several months of notice. Schools already change schedules for construction, weather, and budget reasons. Student health and learning are important enough to justify similar effort.

A later start time is not a cure for every problem, but it is a practical change that supports students' ability to learn.

Passage B:

Keep the Current Start Time

High schools should keep the current start time. Starting later may sound helpful, but it creates problems that affect families, transportation, and after-school responsibilities. Many students work part-time jobs, care for younger siblings, attend athletic practice, or participate in clubs. If school ends later, these activities may be pushed into the evening, leaving students with less time for homework, dinner, and family responsibilities.

Transportation is another concern. Districts often use the same buses for elementary, middle, and high school routes. Moving high school later may force younger children to wait for buses earlier in the morning or may require expensive new transportation plans. Families that depend on older students to help younger siblings after school could also face new childcare problems.

Supporters of later start times assume students will use the extra morning time for sleep, but that is not guaranteed. Some students may stay up later if they know school starts later. Without education about sleep habits and limits on late-night screen use, a schedule change may produce less benefit than expected.

Schools should teach students about sleep and encourage healthy routines, but changing the entire daily schedule may create more disruption than improvement.
